

Circleville Pumpkin Festival still a top fall destination for regional residents

CENTRALOHIO.COM

With organizers expecting as many as 300,000 visitors during the four-and-a-half day run of the Circleville Pumpkin Festival, it has cemented its place as a top destination every autumn for regional residents looking to capture a last taste of outdoor festival fun before winter weather arrives.

The annual event that takes over a portion of Circleville's downtown returned Tuesday evening and runs through Saturday with all of the food, midway rides, pumpkin show judging, live entertainment and parades the show has become known for.

After a preview night Tuesday, the show hit full stride with a full day of activities Wednesday. Throughout the festival's run, live entertainment will be on display at a Main Street Stage, the Circleville-Pickaway Visitors Pavilion and the Pickaway-Franklin Street Stage. Craft demonstrations also will be offered throughout the festival at 159 E. Franklin St.

Among some of the remaining daily highlights are:

■ Today — A baby parade at 3:30

According to the show's Web site, the show's origins go back to 1903, when Circleville Mayor George Haswell decided to host a small exhibit in front of his West Main Street home. Since pumpkins made up one of the primary decorations for the exhibit, it became known as "the pumpkin show."

More involvement from area merchants throughout the years helped the show grow, until a permanent organization made up of volunteers formed to take over operations for an annual pumpkin show. In 1946, the nonprofit Circleville Pumpkin Show Inc. was formed to coordinate activities.
