'COOPERATIVE' NOW IS CHIEF WORD IN TURKISH ECONOMICS
ANGORA, Turkey (AP)—Cooperative' is the chief word in Turkey's new economic vocabulary. Following his personal investigation of Anatolia's political and economic situation, President Kemal proposes the creation of cooperative societies for each of Turkey's chief products.

Fig raisers in Smyrna already are banded in a co-operative, and the Govt would extend this system to tobacco, silk, cotton, mohair, dairy products and other items on Turkey's export list.

Two great gains are expected for Turkey: first, peasant and manufacturer will gain through selling his products directly to the co-operative instead of through middle-men; and secondly, Turkish exports, whose revenues suffer at present from lack of uniformity in quality, will be standardized through the control of the co-operatives.

Kemal advocates the development of consumers' as well as of producers' co-operatives. At his orders, a model co-operative grocery store for government officials is to be opened near the presidential residence in Tchan-Kaya, the Back Bay of Angora.
